INTO A LIFE-CHANGING RELATIONSHIP WITH JESUS CHRIST.

The Throne I Never Owned

Article by Melanie Lim

The Illusion of Control

“You will be like God” (Genesis 3:5). These words, whispered in Eden, marked humanity’s first rebellion. When Satan tempted Eve with the forbidden fruit, he dangled the illusion of autonomy—a counterfeit promise that she could seize her own destiny, rooted in the lie that God could not be trusted.

This desire to sit atop the throne of control persists today. As women, control is often the silent idol behind our struggles. We orchestrate our lives—managing homes, careers, relationships, and ministries—

convinced that meticulous planning guarantees perfect outcomes.

“Responsibility clenched too tightly becomes idolatry. True stewardship accepts duty but yields outcomes to God.”

When Control Becomes an Idol

Control masquerades as responsibility, whispering that diligence demands unceasing vigilance. We convince ourselves we’re simply being conscientious—good stewards of what God has given us.

But responsibility clenched too tightly becomes idolatry. True stewardship accepts duty but yields outcomes to God; it works faithfully, then rests trustingly. Control, however, never sleeps. It’s a false god, demanding all our energy but offering only anxiety in return.

Shattered Illusions

When I was diagnosed with cancer, this illusion shattered. I had always prided myself on planning—painstakingly mapping out my days, my career, my future. But cancer respects neither plans nor timelines.

In those early days, I raged against the loss of control. I desperately wanted to know why this was happening and how to fix it. But the more I grasped for answers, the heavier my helplessness became.

Finding Peace in Surrender

It was in surrender that I found peace. I remembered Christ's prayer in Gethsemane: "Not my will, but yours, be done" (Luke 22:42). In that moment, I realized that control had never been mine. My role wasn't to orchestrate outcomes but to trust the One who holds my life in His hands.

This journey hasn't been a one-time act but a moment-by-moment choice. I still wrestle with the desire to control—to demand answers and plan for every outcome. The serpent's whisper still tempts me daily, urging me to grasp beyond my boundaries.

The Call to True Stewardship

But God designed us for a different posture. Self-control—the fruit of the Spirit—directs our focus inward, calling us to “take every thought captive to obey Christ” (2 Corinthians 10:5).

When I fixate outwardly, obsessing over what I cannot control, I neglect the garden of my own heart. I exhaust myself trying to control what God never entrusted to me: outcomes I can't determine, hearts I can't change, and futures I can't see.

The antidote isn't chaos or passivity but active, surrendered stewardship—tending faithfully to what God has assigned while releasing the rest. It's remembering that He gives me choice, not control—holding my plans with open hands, trusting His purposes are always better.

An Invitation to Rest

Jesus invites us, “Come to me, all you who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest” (Matthew 11:28). This rest, forfeited in Eden, is what Christ promises to restore.

Sisters, what might it look like to accept this invitation today? Perhaps it's surrendering to God's timing in your career, releasing the anxiety that drives you to revise your resume for the twentieth time this week. Or entrusting your husband to God's guidance, silencing the urge to correct his driving or micromanage his parenting decisions. Or perhaps it's finding peace in knowing that your worth isn't tied to perfectly behaved children or mapping out every minute of their day.

Instead of grasping for control, God calls us to open our hands in surrender and fold them in prayer. For the One whose nail-scarred hands hold the universe will never let us go. He who secured our eternity can surely be trusted with our earthly tomorrows.
