INTO A LIFE-CHANGING
RELATIONSHIP WITH JESUS CHRIST.

Worship Begins with Wonder

Article by Pastor Paul Choo
Founding Pastor

Worship is our response to knowing God. As we behold Him in His Word, experience His goodness, and see His hand in our lives, our hearts should be filled with wonder. True worship flows from that “wow” — the amazement that rises when we see God as He truly is.

But one important expression of worship is congregational worship: the gathered praise of God’s people.

Entertainment-Driven Worship

Scripture warns us that in the last days people will be “lovers of pleasures rather than lovers of God” (2 Tim. 3:4). This has serious implications for worship. Many today approach church not primarily asking, “Is God honoured?” but “Am I pleased?” Worship can easily become entertainment. The music, atmosphere, style, sermon, and even the preacher can be measured by personal preference rather than biblical faithfulness.

The danger is not merely that worship becomes attractive. There is a place for making our gatherings accessible and welcoming. Jesus Himself drew crowds and met real needs. But He never stopped there. He gave them truth. The church must take care that in seeking to reach people, we do not merely entertain them. We must draw people in so that they may encounter God’s Word, not simply enjoy a religious experience.

True Worship Needs God's Power

Scripture also warns of those who have “a form of godliness” while denying its power (2 Timothy 3:5). A church may have impressive buildings, large crowds, polished music, and many outward forms of religion — yet still lack the transforming power of God. True worship is not proven by performance or atmosphere, but by lives changed through the gospel.

“The issue is not whether worship suits our personal taste, but whether it is appropriate for honouring God and edifying His people.”

Navigating Preferences with Wisdom

Congregational worship also often exposes our own hearts. Music is emotional and subjective. Some prefer older hymns, others newer songs. Some think all music styles are acceptable as long as the lyrics are sound. Others believe only one musical form is truly appropriate for worship. But we must recognise that God's people worship across cultures, languages, and musical traditions. The issue is not whether worship suits our personal taste, but whether it is appropriate for honouring God and edifying His people.

This calls for wisdom. Worship should be attractive, but also appropriate. We should seek to connect with people, but always with the goal of connecting them to God. The church must avoid both extremes: refusing to adapt at all, or adapting so much that the holiness of worship is lost.

Worship Is Not About Me

At the same time, each worshipper must examine his own attitude. Heb. 13:15 calls us to offer “a sacrifice of praise” to God. We do not gather first to be entertained, but to offer praise. That means worship will sometimes require us to lay aside our preferences. We may not like every song, arrangement, or style. But congregational worship is not about me. It is about God, and it is also about encouraging the body of Christ.

A self-centred worshipper will always be frustrated, because no church can satisfy every preference. But joy comes when we put Jesus first, others next, and ourselves last. We come not as consumers to be pleased, but as a redeemed people praising God.

Conclusion

May our worship never be reduced to performance, preference, or entertainment. May it be the gathered praise of people whose hearts are continually amazed by God. A people who come not merely to receive pleasure, but to honour the Lord who is worthy of all praise.
