INTO A LIFE-CHANGING RELATIONSHIP WITH JESUS CHRIST.

The One Who Showed Mercy: Who Is My Neighbour?

Article by Deacon Lim Chwee Ming
Care Group Cluster Leader

Growing up in a non-Christian environment, my understanding of mercy was simply performing acts of kindness for people in need. This included serving the elderly in nursing homes, helping children in orphanages, or even canvassing for donations for worthy causes.

Such acts of kindness can be immensely rewarding, offering an innate sense of satisfaction from having done something “good”. Looking back, I cannot completely identify my true motivations for performing these acts. Was it a sense of pride in helping others, or perhaps even a selfish desire to feel better about myself, without needing human validation or praise?

Regardless of the reasons, these desires may have shaped my decision to become a doctor—a profession I believed, and still believe, is worthwhile because it combines good, stable remuneration with the opportunity to help people by treating their medical conditions.

But since becoming a Christian nearly two decades ago, I have come to ask myself: What is the true meaning of mercy?

The Bible provides several important insights through the Parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:25–37).

Mercy Flows from Compassion

First, the desire to show mercy and the act of doing so should be a natural outpouring of a believer's compassion. Mercy is no longer an optional part of the Christian life, but an intentional desire to serve and minister to those in need.

When asked about inheriting eternal life, Jesus pointed to the command to love God with all our heart, soul, strength and mind, and to love our neighbour as ourselves (Luke 10:25–27).

The Samaritan demonstrated what this love looks like by showing mercy to a neighbour in need (v. 37).

“Second, mercy involves more than good intentions. It requires us to act—meeting physical needs, giving sacrificially and providing tangible support”

Mercy Is Love in Action

Second, mercy involves more than good intentions. It requires us to act—meeting physical needs, giving sacrificially and providing tangible support (James 2:15–16).

However, this does not mean we perform acts of mercy to make ourselves right with God. Rather, such acts demonstrate the outworking of genuine faith, as we put our compassion for those in need into action.

Mercy Begins with God's Mercy Towards Us

Third, our motivation for showing mercy stems from recognising that we have first received immense mercy from God Himself through the gift of His only Son, Jesus Christ.

Though undeserving of such mercy and grace, God chose to bestow His grace upon us before the foundation of the world.

Therefore, if the gospel truly fuels my motivation for showing mercy, sharing the gospel should also naturally become an integral part of mercy ministry.

For this reason, Tim Keller described the ministry of mercy (deed) and the ministry of evangelism (word) as equally necessary, mutually interdependent and inseparable ministries, carried out with the common purpose of spreading God's kingdom.

Living as Instruments of God's Mercy

With this in mind, we can all become conduits of compassion and love for those in need, regardless of our vocation.

Let mercy and evangelism be worthy aspirations in our daily lives, trusting that God will supply our needs according to His riches in glory in Christ Jesus (Philippians 4:19).

Be merciful because God has first shown us great mercy.

And for those who have yet to trust in our Lord Jesus Christ, there is still hope. Our God is a merciful God who forgives sinners and grants eternal life to those who repent of their sins and put their faith in Jesus Christ, whose blood cleanses us from sin.

We live in a fallen world—and even God's people are not spared from the effects of sin, pain, and struggle. But you don't have to walk through it alone.

Biblical counseling is a safe, gospel-centered space to find help, hope, and clarity through God's Word. It isn't about fixing people—it's about walking with one another in truth and grace. If you're carrying anxiety, grief, relational tension, or just feeling stuck, you're not weak—and you're not the only one.

WOMEN'S MINISTRY - CHOOSING TRUST OVER CONTROL

We often try to plan and control different aspects of our lives, believing we know what is best for ourselves and our loved ones. But what happens when things don't go according to plan or according to our greatest desires?

Join us as we explore "Choosing Trust Over Control". Together, we will reflect on what it means to let go of our need for control, surrender our plans to God, and trust in His wisdom rather than our own understanding, even when life takes unexpected turns.
